Intellectual property

The intellectual property rights (patents, registered designs, unregistered design right, copyright, etc.) of all designs submitted in the competition remain with the candidate. If any sponsor wishes to make use of the work submitted in the competition, a licence or transfer must be negotiated with the candidate. Whilst the RSA claims no intellectual property rights, it does reserve the right to retain designs for exhibition and publicity purposes and to reproduce them in any report of its work, the online exhibition and other publicity material (including the RSA Student Design Awards website). In the case of work carried out during an Internship, different conditions will apply. Candidates should note that certain intellectual property rights (e.g. patents) may be irrevocably lost if action to register them is not taken before any disclosure in exhibitions, press material etc.

Judging

Student Design Awards project juries consist of practising designers and representatives from industry, education and other sponsoring organisations. The judging of each project takes place over two meetings. At the first meeting, the juries view all the submissions and draw up a short-list which demonstrates potential creative ability within the constraints set out in the project brief. Short-listed candidates are invited for interview at which they will discuss their competition entry. Full Portfolio work and plans for the use of an award may also be discussed. Juries are also able to make constructive criticisms of each candidate's portfolio and offer advice. Juries are asked to make an award only when they are entirely satisfied with the design ability of the candidate. RSA Design reserves the right to withhold or divide any of the awards offered, particularly where the entries are not considered to have reached a suitable standard. In all cases the judges' decision is final and no correspondence will be entered into by the RSA.

Internships

Some awards enable winning candidates to spend time working in commercial or industrial organisations on design related projects. Internships offer paid work experience and can be a valuable introduction to a winner's chosen field of design. Details of these awards are available on the website.

Cash Awards

Cash Awards allow the winning student to use their prize towards funding further study, travel to research design in other countries, equipment, business start-up costs or any other purpose agreed with the sponsor and the RSA. All awards must be claimed and used within six months of being given.

Fellowship of the RSA

Candidates over 18 and under 25 years of age who win an award via the RSA Student Design Awards programme will be offered free Fellowship of the RSA valid for one year. Fellows receive the Journal containing reports of RSA lectures, projects and other activities. In addition, they are entitled to attend any of the RSA's lectures, can use the facilities of the Society's London house and may also register on the Fellows only part of the RSA website (www.theRSA.org) where they can partake in discussion forums etc.
