Our approach

Think like a system, act like an entrepreneur

Our biggest challenges - from tackling climate change to renewing democracy – are complex. Failing systems are held together by rules, traditions, assumptions, incentives and institutions. Making change that lasts means reforming the whole system not just one part of it. To fully understand what's going wrong and to develop solutions that last, we need to 'think like a system'.

But the world is also complex, fast changing, unpredictable. Good plans founder on contact with the reality. Even ideas that work often don't last, scale up or change the system as was intended. Our approach to change must allow us to experiment and learn, to change course when things don't work, to accelerate and spread when they do. That's why we need to 'act like an entrepreneur'.

The RSA's unique set of assets as a trusted brand, convener, thought leader, solutions designer and social movement uniquely enables us to 'think like a system and act like an entrepreneur'.

Everything we do is about making a difference. 'Thinking like a system and acting like an entrepreneur' is the best way to make change so it is the way we must work.
